Introduction

This is one site of the Genpei Battle, fought between two groups of samurai – the Genji and the Heike – in old Japan. From the lava plateau that looks like a roof, you can look out over the Seto Inland Sea, as it blends together with the islands and cityscape of Takamatsu.

Although it is now connected, Yashima was a separate island in ancient times. It is said that a castle was built on top of the bluff, a natural protection against invaders from other lands. At Dannoura, the location where the Genpei Battle was fought, the Heike hid their warship, and the archers prayed for their arrows to hit their target at the Inori-iwa (Praying Rock). Many ruins from this time tell the history.

At the summit, the 84th of the Shikoku 88 Holy Places (88 temples where pilgrims visit to rid themselves of bad luck and make wishes) is located at the Yashima Temple. The drive to the summit is very popular, as you look out over the location where the famous Kagawa product aji stone is produced.
